More Adventures in Source Citations

Where did you find that tidbit? Was it from a book or a microfilm? How reliable was the information? Your source citation should provide the answers to these questions and more. Does it? If not, it's time to learn a little more about the science - and art - of citing your sources.

Susan Goss Johnston is a 2011 ProGen alumna, has completed the "Advanced Methodology and Evidence Analysis" course at the Institute of Genealogy and Historical Research, the National Archives lecture and lab course, "Going to the Source", and has attended the National Institute on Genealogical Research. She is also a co-editor (with L-AGS members Kay Speaks and Duncan Tanner) of the recently published Source Templates for the Master Genealogist. Her personal research focuses on families in New England and the Mid-Atlantic region, and she specializes in military records. Sue is a frequent speaker at local meetings and conferences.
