Look Locally: Finding the Women in Our History

Delve into the past with the women from our local history and family trees. Understand the challenges involved in uncovering their stories. Celebrate the details, big and small, that records reveal about their lives, families, and communities. Through a series of case studies, we will see how the usual genealogy go-to records contain clues that reveal research leads. We will also see how studying the men in women's lives unlocks doors to their own details. And we will explore how historical context sets the scene for understanding the circumstances that influenced the choices and stories of our female ancestors.

Candice Buchanan is a Reference Librarian at the Library of Congress, specializing in Local History and Genealogy. As a teenager in search of a haunted mausoleum she discovered her ancestors' tombstones, launching a lifelong determination to identify past generations. Candice is a board-certified genealogist with a Master's Degree in Public History from Duquesne University. At the Library, she helps patrons to develop research strategies; locate records; and get the most out of every detail in order to tell ancestors' stories. Prior to joining the Library, Candice worked as a genealogist and archivist for MemoryMedallion Inc., Genealogists.com, and the Greene County, Pennsylvania Orphans' Court.
